The final assignment is a research paper. The purpose of this paper is to research a subject of your interest, ultimately form a thesis, and demonstrate this thesis with academic materials that act as evidence for your argument.

Ideally, your final paper will have an introduction explaining your subject and thesis. This will be followed by the body of your paper demonstrating well organized arguments supported by academic research materials that are properly sourced. Lastly, a conclusion will finalize your paper summarizing your overall thesis and how you argued your case. Thematic organization may be helpful in your writing process.

Be critical when determining the quality of your sources as this can have a drastic effect on the overall effectiveness of your final paper. Your best option is to find sources in the library or academically peer-reviewed papers on some of the journal databases that you can find through Weldon's library website. Examples such as Jstor, Project Muse, and Proquest are good areas to start.
